Beta version software products are software products that are still under development and testing, and are not supported. If you download a beta version software product then you are getting an exclusive look at a new software product and you are also acting as a testing user for this product. Therefore, any bugs, problems or suggested improvements should be reported using the e-mail address: customersuccess@phusion.nl.

If Phusion intends to distribute a commercial release of the Software product, Phusion reserves the right at any time to alter prices, features, licensing terms, or other characteristics of the commercial release. Phusion reserves the right at any time to withdraw the license without a particular reason.

You may not incorporate the Software product into any other "commercial" software product, or "resell" or "rent" the Software product as a standalone product or as part of a software product, without Phusion's prior permission.

You agree that you will not use, license, transfer or otherwise dispose of the Software product, the information distributed to you in order to use the product, or documentation in violation of any national or international copyright laws. You undertake also:

1. To send fault reports and any questions or suggestions for improvement relating to the beta test software by e-mail only to the e-mail address: customersuccess@phusion.nl.
